Dear Estate Planning Clients:

Thank you again for trusting me with the task of either preparing or updating your estate plan. Part of my service to you is to keep you up-to-date regarding developments that might affect your plan. The beginning of the year is often a good time to assess the state of your personal and financial affairs. My hope is that this letter will be relevant to your needs and that you will take a moment to contact me if you have any questions. I am always happy to be of service.

Estate Tax Changes:

The federal estate tax (or the so-called "death tax") is a tax imposed by the federal government on the value of all assets and property left by a deceased person. The estate tax was eliminated for 2010, but only for that one year. At the close of the Congressional session in 2010, a new tax law was enacted that, among other things, re-instates the federal estate tax for 2011 and 2012. Under the new law, the estate tax for 2011 and 2012 will apply to estates that exceed $5,000,000 per person at a 35% tax rate. As a result of this change, the estate tax will impact only those individuals worth more than $5,000,000, or couples worth more than a combined $10,000,000.

An interesting feature of the new estate tax law is the "portability" of the individual estate tax exemption between married couples. For the first time in the history of the estate tax, the unused portion of a deceased spouse's federal estate tax exemption can be claimed by the surviving spouse. What this means is that upon the death of the first spouse, any unused (or left-over) portion of that person's exemption will carry-over to the surviving spouse, so that the surviving spouse's estate will benefit not only from their own exemption, but also the additional left-over amount of their pre-deceased spouse's exemption.

In general, your revocable living trust has been prepared to allow for changes in the federal estate tax structure. The current tax law changes should not require any major revision to anyone's revocable living trust, as long as the revocable living trust was originally drafted to accommodate estate tax planning. Of course, if you have any questions about this, please feel free to contact me.

In summary, there likely is no need to take any action at this time, and I will keep you informed as developments warrant. As always, if a change in law affects your particular plan I will contact you immediately.

Gift Tax:

In addition to the estate tax, the federal tax law also sets forth provisions applicable to gift tax, or the tax that must be paid by the person making a gift, if the gift exceeds a certain threshold. The gift tax has been changed for 2011 and 2012, unifying the tax rate and the lifetime exemption with the estate tax. The gift tax now has a top rate of 35% and a lifetime exemption amount of $5,000,000.

With regard to the annual gift tax exemption, that remains $13,000 per recipient per year. What that means is simple: Anyone can give up to $13,000 in gifts to any one person in any annual period without any gift tax implications. Gifts to spouses (who are U.S. citizens) and payments directly to hospitals or educational institutions are excluded from gift tax and, therefore, may exceed the $13,000 threshold without triggering any gift tax or eroding the lifetime gift tax exemption.

Maximize Your Value:

You have spent considerable time and energy in creating your estate plan. It is crucial that you continue to receive value from it. To ensure that we preserve that value, we should periodically review the plan as well as your current situation to make sure the two remain in sync. Among the more common developments affecting your estate plan are: (1) whether your personal situation, or the personal situation of any of the individuals you have identified to play a role in your estate plan – such as executor, trustee or guardian – has changed in the time since we created your estate plan; (2) whether your financial picture has changed in the time since we originally created your estate plan (such as the purchase of additional substantial life insurance or the purchase of a new home or additional real estate); and (3) whether the law has changed in ways that impact the assumptions we made when we first created your estate plan. If there has been any change in your personal or financial situation, please contact me so that we can discuss whether we should make any adjustments to your estate plan to accommodate those changes.

Proper Titling of Assets:

If we created a revocable living trust and you have re-financed your home since we created that trust, we should make certain that your home (and any other real estate) is still properly titled in your trust. Often times when you re-finance, lenders require you to title the property out of your trust in order to conduct the re-financing. In some cases, those lenders (or the escrow company) will title the property back into the trust following the funding of the loan, but sometimes that does not happen. Consequently, title to your home could be outside of your trust, potentially jeopardizing our work. Therefore, if you have a trust, have re-financed in the time since we created the trust, and you do not know for certain whether your title to your home was affected by the re-financing, please contact me so that we can make sure title is properly listed and if it is not, then we can make the changes necessary to correct title.

The same is true if you purchased new real estate – we should discuss how the new real estate was titled at the time you bought it. If title is not listed in your trust, then we can make the changes necessary to correct title.

In addition, if you have opened additional accounts or acquired additional assets in the time since we created your estate plan, please take the time to understand how title is held to those accounts and how the beneficiary(ies) are designated (if applicable) to those accounts. Your estate plan will work most efficiently if everything is properly titled and beneficiaries are properly designated to ensure all assets are distributed in accordance with the same plan.

Proper Beneficiary Designation:

I recommend that you take the time to verify that your assets have been properly titled and the beneficiaries properly designated to accomplish all of the goals important at the time we created your estate plan. If your estate plan includes a revocable living trust, then please make sure your home is titled in the name of the trust, that your taxable investment accounts and business interests are titled in the name of the trust, and that your tax-deferred retirement accounts identify the correct designated beneficiaries. If you have any questions about these tasks, please feel free to contact me so that I can provide you with the help you need.

Homeowners Insurance and Your Revocable Living Trust:

If your estate plan includes a revocable living trust and you have re-titled your home into your trust, I recommend that you inform your insurance agent of this fact. Some insurers require that you inform them that you have a trust and that your home is titled into the trust in order to insure the home. You have purchased and continue to pay premiums for your property and liability (a.k.a. "homeowner's") policy. However, some insurers will not recognize your trust as being "insured" under the policy unless it is listed as an additional named insured under the policy. Please check with your insurance agent if your insurer requires your trust to be listed as an additional named insured.

Investments and Your Estate Plan:

With the ups and downs we all have experienced in the financial markets and real estate over the past few years, some of you may be wondering whether any changes should be made to your estate plan. In general, changes in the value of assets should not affect the estate plan that we created, unless that change in value is a significant increase. Otherwise, as long as your assets are properly titled and the beneficiaries on your accounts have been designated properly, there is nothing that should need to be done as a consequence of the change in an asset's value.

Reconsidering Some of Your Estate Planning Decisions:

I also recommend that you take some time to review who you have identified in your estate planning documents as playing critical roles – guardians for minor children, successor trustees, executors, power of attorney agents, health care agents – to ensure that you are still comfortable with giving those responsibilities to the people you selected at the time you prepared your estate plan. Often times, people's situations change. Sometimes those changes can impact the criteria you used when selecting those people in the first place. Part of the process of updating your estate plan is to make appropriate changes to the list of role-players when situations change for those role-players.

Referring Clients to Me:

The first quarter of the calendar year is my busiest time because many people are evaluating what they need to accomplish and want to complete during the next year. New Year's Resolutions are often the trigger for the preparation of an estate plan, will or trust. I hope you keep me in mind if the subject of Wills or Trusts comes up with any of your family or friends. Typically, my clients fall into one or more of the following categories:

- People with young children who want to nominate guardians and establish trusts to fund the children's education and provide for their children's future.
- People who own assets (including real estate, businesses, investments, life insurance and more) and want to control how those assets are managed and distributed in the event of either incapacity or death.
- People who want to minimize the loss of their net worth due to the impact of the Probate Court process in the event of their death or incapacity.
- People who want to minimize the impact of federal estate taxes on the value of the assets they wish to pass on to others at their death.
- People with existing estate plans who want to ensure that everything is still in order and up-to-date.

As always, I thank you for your support and for the referrals that you have given me in the past and into the future.

Very truly yours,
